

Artists and Scouts are eager participants. They want to engage with their environment directly. Bird-box workshop provided an opportunity for active co-operation and dialogue between members of these groups. However, in order to receive a productivist they decided to conceal their names and results.

A: "Art positions itself with certain intention, intensity and dedication, in this sense, this activity is comparable to a "loving deed". Artists are not unlike scouts."

B: "Maybe. Scouting practice encourages the participant to engage in a "daily good deed". It forms a certain mentality. Rule 3 is "A Scout's duty is to be useful and help others."

A: "That is a good habit. It induces an exploration of one's own environment. Work of art is also an ideological act that is modelled in co-operation with, and developed according to the wishes of the other. Like planting seeds for a real and metaphoric garden. Organised production of bird-boxes can be interpreted as the utopian conspiracy. Bird songs will evoke radical moods and sentiments."

B: "Once one can grasp a tool he is master of infinite possibilities. Global warming, air pollution, oil spills. It is too easy to become overwhelmed and forget the wonders that can be found in the local environment."
