

This was supposed to be a fashion shoot.

What I was more interested though was the body, which has been made vulnerable - even by gaze. Clothing is a second skin. Clothing is protection. It is necessary to cover your breasts, your loins, your arms, your legs, your stomach, your back....

Sometimes I dream of walking naked on the street. It's a weird unrelaxed sensation of exposure. You do not have the right to walk naked in public. To wear is to fit in. There is however a choice of what to wear (when+where), your clothes define your movements. T-shirts have the shape of torsos, trousers have the shape of legs. How do you behave...?

I simply wanted to show two people, man + woman, who get dressed. The make of clothes themselves is not important.....it is more like; shoe-shoes, a jacket-jacket.....

At the same time it's a journey through different places/spaces. Architecture is a third skin. All the locations have some sort of link to the item of clothing+the body part shown.
